

Lorenzo the Clever Parrot

Bilingual Adventure

There once was a brilliant parrot named Lorenzo. He wasn't just any parrot-he was a dazzling mix of blue and yellow feathers that shimmered like sunlight on the sea. But the most amazing thing about Lorenzo? He could speak Spanish perfectly!

Lorenzo lived in a cozy treehouse in Costa Rica with a kind old man named Don Rafael, who loved books, music, and long conversations. Every morning, Lorenzo would greet him with a cheerful:

"¡Buenos días, Don Rafael!"

They would sip warm tea (well, Don Rafael did-Lorenzo preferred mango juice) and talk about the world.

One sunny day, Don Rafael fell ill and couldn't go to the village to buy medicine. Lorenzo knew just what to do.

"¡Voy al mercado!" squawked Lorenzo.

He flew across the forest, dodging monkeys and curious butterflies. When he reached the village market, he landed on the shoulder of the pharmacist and said:

"Mi amigo está enfermo. Necesita medicina, por favor."

The townspeople were amazed! A talking parrot-in Spanish!

The pharmacist gave Lorenzo the medicine, along with a basket of fruit as a thank-you gift. Lorenzo returned to Don Rafael just in time, and helped him feel better.

From that day on, Lorenzo became the village's official messenger. He delivered notes, told jokes, and even taught a few Spanish phrases to tourists.

He wasn't just a bird-he was a hero, a linguist, and a legend.

"¡Nunca subestimes a un loro inteligente!"

("Never underestimate a clever parrot!")
